Ex-model links media to attacks on women

By Nicole Medgin
Staff Writer

Two young women gripped each other in an emotional embrace near the back of Chumash Auditorium Thursday night, openly crying as the powerful presentation ended with a song about a woman being raped on the hood of a Cadillac.

Ann Simonton addresses the audience.

The crowd of men, women and children had listened to Ann Simonton, a former cover model turned feminist activist, discuss her experiences as a model.

Simonton's lecture was part of "Take Back The Night," an annual presentation held to raise awareness about rape and what can be done to help end it.

Simonton used a series of hard core pornographic slides and personal stories to explain how she realized through her experiences as a model that the treatment of women in society today is related to the way they are portrayed in magazines and advertisements.

Simonton began modeling at the age of 14. She appeared on the cover of such well-known magazines as Sports Illustrated and Seventeen.

Simonton said for her, being in the Miss California beauty contest was, "a form of public humiliation...It wasn't something that was easy for me to do or something that came naturally for me in any way."

"It makes young women grow up feeling that they have to be a good object," she said of modeling. "That the better you look, the more money you can make. I realized that very quickly, women grow up with a price tag attached to them."

In June 1971, Simonton was working in New York for what she called a "very prestigious modeling agency" when she was raped at knifepoint by three men on her way to work.

"After going through a judicial system that told me I needed a witness to prosecute and a hospital procedure where I was the fourth rape victim for that day, I was shocked," she said. "I was shocked that the judicial system wasn't there for me, and I also realized at an early age that women are attacked simply because they're female."

Simonton said her reason for telling the audience she was raped was not to gain sympathy.

"I feel everyone has a right to tell their story," she said. "I like to share the story also, because people always say 'Gee, why did you stop modeling?'"

After her ordeal, Simonton said she continued to model for a couple of years, but soon began to see a bad side to the business.

Fleet-footed Cuesta student jailed after Stenner crash

A five-hour search for a hit-and-run driver ended in the arrest of a Cuesta College student Saturday morning, police said.

Cameron Joseph Leavens, 19, was arrested on felony hit-and-run charges at 1 a.m. Saturday in his room at Stenner Glen, 1050 Foothill Blvd., according to San Luis Obispo police Lt. Dan Blanke.

This followed a five-hour search during which Leavens evaded police and abandoned his vehicle, Blanke said.

The incident began at 8 p.m. in the parking lot of Stenner Glen, Blanke said. Leavens was allegedly driving his Jeep Wrangler "recklessly" around the parking lot when he collided with a Geo Storm driven by Kim Sang, 24, of Lompoc.

Blanke said Sang stepped out of his car to talk to Leavens and was knocked to the ground by Leavens' vehicle as he drove away from the scene.

Sang received "mild" whiplash from the initial collision and scrapes on his left arm from the fall, Blanke said.

Police said they were alerted and given a description of Leavens' Jeep, which was later spotted on Luneta Drive. Leavens then stopped his vehicle and fled on foot, Blanke said.

The Jeep has been impounded for evidence.

Blanke said the chase ended when police received reports that Leavens had returned to Stenner Glen. Police found and arrested him there at 1 a.m.

Leavens is being held at the San Luis Obispo County Jail on $4,000 bail.

Locals hold rally to hype hemp SLO 'teach-in' put together to dispel bad reputation

"Move over Ben and Jerry," said Alan Brady as he dished out a scoop of homemade marijuana-seed ice cream at Sunday's hemp-fest.

"It tastes like gelato," Brady said of the brown, frozen goo he makes at his Santa Cruz home. The concoction made of legal, sterile hemp seeds and bananas looks "freaky" one taster observed, "but it tastes totally good."

Brady's ice cream was one of several hemp-made products on hand at a day-long marijuana "teach-in" and rally on the lawn of the San Luis Obispo County Government Center.

Curious onlookers crowded the vending tables and laid out on the lawn, listening to music and speakers and occasionally passing joints among themselves.

Among the speakers were "Brownie Mary" Rathbun, who was arrested while making marijuana brownies to distribute to AIDS patients. Rathbun said she came to the event as part of a 35-year campaign to legalize marijuana.

Sharon Williamson, a student at Alan Hancock College, brought her sons with her, so they could see an environment where pot-smoking was normal.

She said her sons, ages 5 and 7, were "free to make up their own minds" about marijuana, rather than be flatly told to "just say no."

States face legal quandary if Hawaii allows homosexual marriage

What if homosexuals could legally marry? That conversational icebreaker could soon throw bombshells across America if Hawaii permits gay matrimony as its high court says it should.

Would other states be obliged to honor Hawaiian vows? Law and history say yes, and no. Homosexual couples who plan a wedding in Hawaii may need a lawyer when the honeymoon is over.

Constitutional and general legal principles require states to honor each other's laws. "Essentially, it is what allows us to exist as one nation, that we don't have a million different laws across the states," said William Rubenstein, director of the American Civil Liberties Union lesbian

"The Hawaii decision is not over, but it shows there is an avenue for possible recognition of gay and lesbian relationships, even in the traditional marriage."

Harvard law Professor Martha Minow and gay rights project.

But another important tenet says states can make an exception when the public there holds strong contrary views.

Courts weighing differing marriage laws, "as a general rule, will validate the parties' expectations if (the marriage) was valid where the relationship was entered into — unless it violates public policy," said Professor Linda Elrod at Washburn University in Topeka, Kan. She is editor of the American Bar Association's Family Law Quarterly.

But how do you measure public policy?

Laws on the books are one indicator, say experts who suggest the 25 states that outlaw sodomy will have a strong argument against recognizing same-sex marriages, as will those with laws specifically defining marriage as a contract between a woman and a man.

It's clear that lawyers, judges, lawmakers and the public — not to mention homosexual couples eager to tie a legal love knot — will probably find themselves hiking through a legal thicket if Hawaii allows homosexual marriages.

"This is uncharted terrain," said Harvard law Professor Martha Minow, a family law specialist. "The Hawaii decision is not over, but it shows there is an avenue for possible recognition of gay and lesbian relationships, even in the traditional marriage."

It could be up to two years before Hawaii settles this question, at least for its own residents.

Poll reveals happy Poly renters

Students worry about roommates; think landlords give a fair shake

By Sharon Wiebe
and Nicole Medgin
Staff Writers

As the school year comes to a close and leases start expiring, many students are beginning to search for next year's housing.

But it's who they live with — not where, or for what cost — that is the biggest worry for Cal Poly students, according to an unscientific Mustang Daily poll.

Of 271 students surveyed at various campus locations last week, 63 percent ranked roommates as the number-one consideration when choosing a place to live.

Ian Widlow, a materials engineering major, said his roommates are the best thing about where he lives.

"They are quiet and respectful of each other's privacy," he said.

Most of those who live on campus also were highly satisfied with their roommates.

"I think it's real important when choosing a place to live — if one can really feel comfortable studying in their own home."

Edward Bautista
Electronic engineering

"Being in the dorms allowed me to make many new friends," said nutritional science sophomore Kelly Crabtree.

Cost and location are typically important concerns for students shopping for a new place to live. Many questioned by the Daily said they felt the local housing market is giving them a fair shake.

Of those surveyed, 61 percent said they felt their rent was "average" or "better," and 21 percent rated their rent as "excellent." Only 12 percent of those polled said their rent was "below average" and 6 percent said it was "poor."

Also, 89 percent of students who live both on and off campus said they are satisfied with their present location, with 38 percent rating it as excellent. Only 3 percent of those polled said their location was poor.

Liberal studies major Christy Burroughs described why she likes her off-campus housing.

"(It's) easy to walk (and) bike to campus, the grocery store and downtown," she said.

A high rate of satisfaction also was given by on-campus residents.

John Faries, a graphic communications senior and Shasta Hall dorm resident, said his location is the best.

"Living on campus (makes it) easy to get to school, food, the gym and town," he said.

Many students also said they like peace and quiet.

"The place where I live has a real quiet environment which is conducive to studying," said Edward Bautista, an electronic engineering junior. "I think it's real important when choosing a place to live — if one can really feel comfortable studying in their own home."

The features of a particular place — such as recreation facilities, study rooms and interior furnishings — sometimes cause students to choose one place over another.

According to the survey, what students want is a place they can call home; where they can be comfortable instead of always wanting to be somewhere else.

Steve Becker, a recreation administration major, explained why.

"A comfortable atmosphere and home-type environment make school and work much easier to deal with."

Don't read this

By Bryan Bailey

"I'm gonna be the one who has to die when it's time to die... So I'm gonna live my life... The way I want to."

— Jimi Hendrix
"If 6 was 9"
Axis: Bold as Love

What do the books "Where's Waldo," "Snow White," and "Of Mice and Men" all have in common?

All, at one time or another, have been banned — not in the former "Evil Empire" of the Soviet Union. Not in some backwater pseudo-democracy like Haiti or the Philippines under Marcos, but right here, in the United States — the "land of the free."

These are by no means the only works yanked from public sight during recent decades. The list is long, including (but certainly not limited to):

- "The Diary of Anne Frank," by Anne Frank — banned in Alabama because the State Textbook Committee felt it was "a real downer";

- "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings," by Maya Angelou — nixed for dealing with sexual molestation. This is the same Maya Angelou who was invited to speak at President Clinton's inauguration;

- "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," by Mark Twain — this hit the list due to racial overtones (Twain was a satirist — go figure);

- "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee," by Dee Brown — if you've seen Robert Redford's "Incident at Oglala," then you know why this one was held up. Native-American Indians in the right? Nope;

- "The Prince of Tides," by Pat Conroy — removed for being "trashy pulp pornography" (If this is the only criteria for yank-ing books from public perusal, we had better get some bigger shovels);

- "Catcher in the Rye," by J.D. Salinger — banned, in 1989 yet, for profanity; and;

- "As I Lay Dying," by William Faulkner — pulled for offensive sections about abortion.

The subjects of these titles vary, as do their original publication dates. Not all of them are in what one could consider the "contemporary canon." One might even pass off the repression of such literature as the result of a Puritan morality, a morality now cast off in favor of a more open society. Nothing like any of these works could be censored in today's contemporary atmosphere of "liberal-minded literacy," could it?

Is there a new/old morality at work here, or did I miss the boat?

It may serve to underscore the point if it is noted that all of these works have been banned after 1982.

Is there a new/old morality at work here, or did I miss the boat?

The books previously mentioned as hitting the Moral Majority's "least wanted list," mind you, have not just been banned from the rows of dusty shelves belonging to narrow-minded misanthropists. The largest backer of book banning is the one least able to afford the practice: Schools.

Since the beginning of all our educations, from the time we cracked that first "Dick and Jane" primer to the last page of "The Odyssey," books and literature have been the basic tool of learning.

According to a recent edition of the Los Angeles Times, 27 separate incidents of book banning have arisen in California schools alone in the last year; some 119 similar incidents occurred in the Midwest, and "more than 653 incidents of attempted censorship" took place in 1992.

Almost all were the result of "material offensive to people."

If this is anywhere near the truth, people had better start reappraising their sense of offensive material or face an overwhelming wave of ignorance in the near future. The current trend of censorship is the literary equivalent of shooting yourself in the foot before learning to walk.

There can be no real point to a commentary like this other than that without freedom of choice, censoring just might be a legitimate option; after all, no one should be forced to do anything.

But the fact remains that we do have a choice. The criterion that the material contained in a novel or other literary work is offensive to some people is rendered ineffective due to this choice.

If one doesn't want to be offended, simply put down said material and walk away.

Even with something like this.

Bryan Bailey is Mustang Daily's opinion editor. Much of this column was gleaned from the Los Angeles Times in the interest of helping enlighten the Cal Poly audience.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Yes, it is.

In response to Brian Walsh's letter (May 13) regarding the inability of the university to alphabetize the Summer Schedule properly, I'd just like to say that we should give them a little more credit. I, too, was concerned when I first noticed that the class schedule didn't seem to be in alphabetical order, but if you take another look, you will find that it actually is in alphabetical order according to subject abbreviations. Using your example, the class schedule is organized as follows:

MATE — MATH — ME — MGT — MIS — MKTG — MSC.

I hope this will help you find your classes in future schedules!

Defining the terms

Leo Degrange, according to your letter (May 7), I am a hyphenated American who has not left "the plantation."

I prefer to call myself Chinese-American because I consider that part of my identity. Your classification of those who choose to identify themselves ethnically can be very problematic. Of course, you are entitled to your own opinion, and I respect that, but examine your position and the theory behind it.

What is meant by hyphenating? Retaining one's native culture is indeed a choice, but are you sacrificing any of yours to call yourself an American? Are all multiculturalists anti-American? Are all Americans anti-multiculturalists? How do you define these terms?

Lillian Louie

Making the grade

Martin Luther King, Jr. had a dream that one day every person would be judged by the nature of their character, and not by the color of their skin. This "dream" would come true when the evils of prejudice and segregation were no longer prevalent ways of life.

However, it seems to me that the dream of equality has turned into the American nightmare.

Today in the United States, the "politically correct" attitude sweeping across the nation is the movement toward diversity. Diversity is exactly the opposite of the dream that Martin Luther King, Jr. believed in. His dream was for the uniting of peoples, not the segregation that diversity seems to stress.

Last week was supposed to be "Civil Rights" week, but I don't see anything "civil" about emphasizing one's ethnicity over another. If you can't see any problem with this, just take a look around the world and you'll see for yourself what emphasizing one's diversity can lead to (examples: Bosnia, Burundi, N. Ireland).

I am not saying that one should be "proud" of their heritage and identify with a common background, but if you truly want to live with the "dream," and put an end to the hatred and prejudice, start with yourself, and ask what it is that makes you the way you are. If the answer is your skin color, religion, social status, etc. — you get an "F" for failure.

But if the answer is your ability to accept a person for the character of their soul and the kindness of their hearts — you get an "A" for acceptance.

Dixie McAfee, a multiple sclerosis patient who has a prescription for marijuana pills, said she needs the drug to help her deal with her illness.

McAfee spends more than $600 per month on Marinol, a synthetic marijuana pill, to control her nausea. McAfee also smokes marijuana because it works more effectively than the pills.

"It's not to get high," McAfee said. "It's to control the horrible symptoms of this disease."

McAfee said she favors legalization of marijuana for medical use, but not for recreational use.

Speakers at the event also lectured on the ways they say hemp can solve many environmental and economic problems.

movement after she was arrested last July while mixing two pounds of marijuana into a batch of brownies. After a public outcry over her arrest, the case against her was dismissed.

Dennis Peron, a lobbyist for marijuana legalization, said Rathbun has "given a face to the marijuana movement."

"They fucked with the wrong old lady," said the 70-year-old Rathbun.

Since then, Rathbun has been speaking at conventions and gatherings as part of her 35-year campaign to legalize marijuana and all other drugs.

"We should be able to put in our body what we choose," Rathbun said. "If you want to get hooked on crack or heroin, that's your business."

Rathbun said the money government spends on enforcing drug laws would be better used somewhere else.

"We don't need any more Goddamn jails," Rathbun said. "It's stupid, it doesn't work and it's a waste of government money."

Rathbun said legalizing marijuana for medical use is the first step in getting drugs decriminalized.

"We get medical marijuana first," Rathbun said, "then the hemp plant is on its way."

San Francisco and Santa Cruz have both passed ordinances supporting legalized medical use of marijuana.

Rathbun said Sunday, as she did when she was arrested, the authorities won't keep her from making brownies.

"I'm going to keep making them until I kick the bucket," she said.

realized that there is a connection between showing women as sex objects, and the violence being done to them," she said.

She said it was that realization that changed her life.

Simonton illustrated her lecture with slides and stories about her protests and attempts to change the system.

"This is an image of myself being arrested at the Miss California Pageant," she said, showing a slide of herself wearing a bathing suit made of meat, and a banner labeled 'Miss Behaving.'

Simonton is now the director of an organization called "Media Watch," which exposes the disturbing effects of advertising, pornography, and beauty pageants.

Joan Cirone, Cal Poly's sexual assault response coordinator, said, in introducing the presentation, that women must remain unified in support of issues.

Audience members expressed positive reactions to the presentation.

"I feel it was a vital presentation to heighten the awareness of the sexism and exploitation of women and how we all buy into it by giving our money to certain magazines," said Maggie Devine, a counseling and guidance graduate student.

Members also expressed anger at what they were shown.

"It made me angry to see how women are animalized and objectified and seen as sex objects, yet not able to enjoy love," said Molly Mosely, an aeronautical engineering freshman.

Norm Crandell, a human development senior, said he felt similarly.

"It makes me angry, but proud to be part of the solution," he said.

A candle light march from the University Union Plaza to Santa Rosa Park was held after the lecture. Marchers yelled chants, including: "Stop the violence, no more silence, women fight back!"

Mustangs on top again in CCAA men's track

By Christopher Black
Staff Writer

This weekend was a bit-sweet one for the Cal Poly track and field program.

The men came home from UC San Diego with their fourth straight California Collegiate Athletic Association crown, while the women settled with their second consecutive second-place finish after 10 straight CCAA titles.

The Mustangs were led by All-Americans Dan Berkeland, Jerry Edwards and Chris Carter, who each registered multiple wins to help Cal Poly "run away" from the rest of the field with a final score of 208 points.

Cal State Los Angeles finished a distant second with 115 points.

In the women's meet, Cal State Los Angeles finished with 184 1/2 points to edge Cal Poly (172) for its second straight title.

Berkeland won three events by large margins as he captured the 5,000-meter race by six seconds (14:43.17) and the steeplechase by 12 seconds (9:04.38).

Sorensen breaks 4-minute mile mark at Kezar

By Brad Hamilton
Senior Staff Writer

San Francisco had never witnessed a sub-four minute mile until a Cal Poly student and three others crossed the line under the mark Saturday in the Mizuno Invitational at Kezar Stadium.

Physical education senior Jim Sorensen finished fourth in the race with a time of 3:59.70. Sorensen, a former Cal Poly track and field standout, crossed the line behind winner Matt Giusto (3:55.63), Greg Whiteley (3:57.75) and Aaron Ramirez (3:59.57).

"It is pretty neat to be part of something that has historical significance," Sorensen said. "I knew I could do it, but when you do something for the first time it is always exciting."

The winner, Giusto, a San Francisco native, predicted a sub-four minute mile before he topped his personal best.

Don Bowden, who was the first American to bust the four-minute mark in 1957, was honorary starter of the 4 Minute Challenge.

Bowden ran the sub-four minute mile three years after Great Britain's Roger Bannister made history with his 3:59.4 time.

It was the first sub-four minute mile for Sorensen, the NCAA Division II champion in the 1,500 meter event in 1991.

But last week in the Occidental Invitational, he ran a personal best 3:42.4 in the 1,500 meter event. The 1,500 meter event falls 100 meters short of a mile, but adding 17.4 seconds gives a comparative measure.

Sorensen said the sub-four minute mile felt no different than any other race.

"I actually felt pretty tired," he said.

Sorensen, who is sponsored by Reebok, said his recent success represents hard work paying off.

"I am running well and setting marks never set before," Sorensen said.

His time at the Occidental meet qualified him for the USA Track & Field Championships to be held June 16-19 in Eugene, Ore.

Candaele finished third and Dan Held second in the 800 while Ryan Katri placed third in both the 200 and 400 races.

In the pole vault, Dwayne Dawson took top honors for the Mustangs by clearing 16-13/4, with Chris Thorson second and Erik Rameson third. Brian Adamick, last year's NCAA champion, had no marks and did not place Saturday.

Other noteworthy men's performances included Aaron Mad-dix's victory in the high jump.

In the women's meet, CSLA returned the favor as they narrowly defeated Cal Poly, 184.5-172.

Sophomore Allison Eilerts won the javelin event with a 141-2 throw, and All-American senior Julie Tingle and sophomore Diane Korbel finished 1-2 in the heptathlon for the Mustangs (2967, 2612 points).

Kelly Flathers finished a respectable third in the 3,000 with a time of 10:00.33, as did Sarah Grundman in the 10,000 (40:39.82).

Also in the 3,000, Jennifer Lacovara placed fourth, Shelly Calvert fifth and Angela Orefice sixth.

hurdles with a wind-aided time of 14.90 and the javelin event with throw of 190-9 en route to capturing the decathlon with 485 points.

Carter won the shot put and discus events with distances of 54-11 1/2 and 151-7, respectively.

In all, the Mustangs registered first-place finishes in 11 of 21 events.

Andrew Hill won the triple jump (49-53/4) while Scott Hempel took first and Coley Candaele second in the 1,500.

Spring grid drills end with scrimmage

By Cam Inman
Sports Editor

Cal Poly's spring football practice came to a close Saturday with the annual Green and Gold intrasquad game.

"I thought it was a good effort by all the people involved," coach Lyle Seten-cich said of Saturday's game.

The spring sessions have left Seten-cich "very comfortable" with the team he'll put on the field this fall.

However, the depth of the team has the coach concerned.

"We have 10 to 15 quality football players," he said. "Then, there's a lack of depth. Hopefully the freshmen coming in (this fall) will fill that."

The quarterback spot has yet to be set, with returning starter Pancho Renteria and Santa Clara transfer Mike Fisher vying for the role.

Renteria, who played in seven of Cal Poly's 10 games last year and threw for 419 yards, completed seven of his 13 passes Saturday for 81 yards, with one touchdown and one interception.

Fisher — one of seven transfers from the now defunct Bronco football program — threw for 47 yards on 4-of-7 passing with one touchdown and one interception.

"He'll compete to start," Seten-cich said of Fisher.

As for thinking Renteria is assured the spot, Seten-cich added: "I wouldn't say that."

Andy Guyader, a freshman from San Diego, completed all four of his passes for 55 yards. He also rushed three times and scored on a 7-yard run.

David Vieler led all rushers with 40

The Mustangs open their season at UC Davis on Saturday, Sept. 11. Their first home game is Sept. 25 versus Cal State Hayward.

Men's tennis finishes fifth

By Cam Inman
Sports Editor

Cal Poly rallied past Southwest Baptist (Mo.), 5-3, to capture fifth place Sunday at the 1993 NCAA Division II Men's Tennis Championships in Edmond, Okla.

The Mustangs, who lost their first-round match 5-3 to eventual champion Lander (S.C.) and then beat Troy State 5-1, to end their season 19-5.

"It was a great way to end a great season," Mustang coach Chris Eppright said. "We came out a little flat and took them a little lightly. But every team here is tough."

Cal Poly was on the verge of falling behind 4-2 to Southwest Baptist, but Marc Ollivier pulled out a three-set thriller at No. 2 singles. Ollivier won a 7-4 tiebreaker to claim a 4-6, 6-4, 7-6 triumph.

Ollivier's win made it 3-3 after singles, and Cal Poly finished off Southwest Baptist with easy straight set wins at No. 2 and No. 3 doubles.

Mark Nielsen and Ricardo Reyes posted a 6-3, 6-1 win at No. 2 while Steve Arnott and Josh Johnston won 6-0, 6-1 at No. 3. The No. 1 doubles match was cancelled since Cal Poly had enough wins to take the match.

The Mustangs, who took third place last year, received singles wins also from John Montgomery and Johnston, each taking 6-3, 6-3 victories.

Lander, which beat Hampton (Va.) 5-2 in Sunday's finals, battled Cal Poly for five hours before posting a 5-3 win.

Second-seeded Lander ended the marathon match by posting a 6-4, 4-6, 7-5 win over Nielsen and Reyes at No. 1 doubles.

Cal Poly earlier pulled to within 4-3 when Arnott and Johnston netted a 6-3, 6-0 win at No. 3 doubles.

Ollivier and Johnston recorded the only two Mustang singles victories over the Senators.

Versus Troy State (Ala.), Nielsen, Ollivier, Arnott, Reyes and Johnston all won their singles matches.

Poly sluggers crank out two more wins

By Christopher Black
Staff Writer

While Cal Poly's three-game makeup series with the UC Riverside Highlanders this weekend may not have meant much on paper, the Mustangs played as if it meant a great deal.

Cal Poly took two of three from Riverside as they won Friday night's contest 13-5 and split Saturday's doubleheader. The Mustangs won the first game in 10 innings, 5-4, and dropped the nightcap, 4-1.

Cal Poly coach Steve McFarland mentioned the importance of the series in preparation for next weekend's NCAA Division II West Regionals.

"We did a pretty good job at giving people some playing time this weekend," he said.

One of those players was junior Tom Daly, who after playing in only two other games this season was called upon in Saturday's first game and responded by driving in two runs, including the game-winning in the tenth.

"He played pretty well," said McFarland. "(Daly) gives us someone to go to off the bench in case of injuries in the Regionals."

Steve Rianda led off the top of the tenth with a single. Mark Kuykendall followed with a sacrifice bunt, moving Rianda to second, and Daly delivered the game-winning single to score Rianda.

The win was the Mustangs' fourth straight and the 11th in 13 games. After losing the nightcap, Cal Poly closed out its California Collegiate Athletic Association campaign with a conference-best record of 19-11, 33-17 overall. The Highlanders (14-16, 22-31) finished fourth in the CCAA.
